ARTICLES

MARITIME LAW: THE NATURE AND IMPORTANCE OF ITS INTERNATIONAL CHARACTER

James Allsop

This article considers the unique international character of maritime law – not merely because of regard to be paid to the law of other countries, but as part of the recognition of the existences of a coherent body of international principle, the general maritime law, from which particular municipal laws are created and adapted. The article is in substance the annual William Tetley Lecture at Tulane University in Louisiana delivered in April 2009. 681

ARBITRABILITY AND THE IMPACT OF FRAUD OR CORRUPTION ON INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION

Jeremy Sher

Arbitrators and national courts are increasingly grappling with how to reconcile privately concluded dispute resolution agreements with the public interest in preventing and punishing fraud or corruption. What has become evident in English and American courts is a trend towards permitting the arbitration of classes of disputes which were previously inarbitrable including transactions where there are allegations of fraud or corruption. In Australia, the position is less certain. 702

EVALUATING AUSTRALIA’S RESPONSE TO ALL FORMS OF TRAFFICKING:
TOWARDS RIGHTS-CENTERED REFORM

Frances Simmons and Jennifer Burn

This article assesses Australia’s response to human trafficking in light of the growing focus on trafficking outside the commercial sex industry. The authors propose updating Australia’s response to trafficking to fully reflect Australia’s international obligations to address trafficking, forced labour, and practices similar to slavery such as forced marriage. 712
