ARTICLES

Public access to court records in Australia: An international comparative perspective and some proposals for reform – Judith Bellis

This article provides an overview and comparative analysis of current legal principles, policies and practices governing public access to court records, including electronic records, in Australia, New Zealand, England, the United States and Canada. It canvasses a wide range of reform proposals that have been made in a number of these jurisdictions in the last decade to ensure the appropriate balance between the public interests in open courts and individual rights to privacy. It offers a recommended framework for reform that could be considered at all levels of Commonwealth and State courts in Australia. 197

Judicial complaints and the complaints procedure: Is it time for an independent judicial commission in Victoria? – Diana Karamicov

Judicial misconduct – what it is, how it should be dealt with, and the importance of the independence of the judiciary – are perennial topics for legal commentators. Recent legal and political developments have seen greater scrutiny of judges both on and off the bench. How to scrutinise and discipline errant judges without compromising their independence or bringing the judiciary into disrepute is the subject of this article. The appropriateness and efficacy of an independent judicial body, tasked with the responsibility of judging the judges is analysed in the context of the delicate balance between independence and accountability. 232
