ARTICLES

Human rights protection in Australia: A riposte to Justice Keane – The Hon Michael Kirby AC CMG

The Second Austin Asche Lecture responds to arguments presented in the inaugural lecture in 2011 by Justice Keane, in which he questioned whether broad declarations contained in a constitutionally entrenched Charter of Rights was the best approach. This lecture states the case for a Charter of Rights and further delves into the issue of how best to protect human rights in a democratic society. .... 291

Maintaining the status of the judiciary – The Hon Trevor Riley

Maintaining the integrity and status of each branch of government is essential to ensuring a strong democracy. Some legislative policies pursue short-term objectives without regard to the long-term consequences for the integrity of the judiciary. The author highlights three areas of concern. .... 307

Negligence: On the edge of the abyss – Bill Piper

Negligence, as a basis for legal liability, has become maligned, marginalised and, more recently, modified to the brink of extinction. As mutterings for its abolition in favour of a system of self-insurance for accidents become louder, it now stands on the edge of an abyss. Should it be given the final push? This article is a short review of the history of negligence and its place in society. .... 321
