Games of tag: The rise and disappearance of enterprise collaborative bookmarking – Matt Moore

Social bookmarking sites such as Delicious have arisen on the internet. Enterprises have been experimenting with open source and commercial versions of such tools within – and sometimes across – their firewalls. This article begins with an overview of social bookmarking and folksonomies. It then explores two case studies (MITRE Corporation in the United States and New South Wales Department of Education and Training here in Australia) and two vendor offerings (Connectbeam and IBM Lotus Connections). It ends by offering some conclusions on the future of enterprise collaborative bookmarking and some advice for those wishing to engage in it. 8

Ramping it up: 10 Lessons learnt in mass digitisation – Rose Holley

In 2007 the National Library of Australia (NLA) began a large-scale newspaper digitisation program that aimed to digitise one million pages (10 million articles) per year, with a view to increasing the volume over time and ramping up digitisation to include books and journals as well as newspapers. By the end of 2009 the NLA had learnt 10 key lessons about ramping up its digitisation activities into a mass-scale operation. 16

Towards freedom – Part 2: A menagerie of libre works – Bill Browne
